4. Application and Information

4-1. Applying as a Regular Undergraduate Student or Regular Graduate Student

Applicants hoping to become regular undergraduate students are required to take the “Examination for Japanese University Admission for International Students (EJU)” conducted by the Japan Student Services Organization, an independent administrative institution, and pass the “Selective Entrance Exam for Self-Financed International Students” administered by the University. Applicants must also submit their TOEIC or TOEFL scores. Faculty of Medicine does not administer the “Selective Entrance Exam for Self-Financed International Students”.

To be admitted as a regular graduate student, applicants are required to pass the entrance examination for the department to which they are applying.

4-2. Applying as a Research Student

To be admitted as a research student, applicants must demonstrate an academic ability equivalent or superior to a university graduate and have a specific research subject at the University. Prior to application, prospective applicants need to obtain approval from the relevant academic advisor and a permit from the University. Although a research student does not receive a degree upon completion of the research period, he or she receives a certificate of research authorized by his or her academic advisor. In addition, applicants must satisfy the University’s Japanese proficiency requirements.
